INTRODUCTION

The presented report from the survey on the employment of foreign workers in social services was prepared within the framework of the European project Foreign Workers in Social Sector, funded by the Erasmus+ programme (project No. 2021-1-CZ01-KA220-VET-000025630). Its aim is to promote the employment of foreign workers in the social care sector, contributing to their subsequent integration, by proposing new measures, recommendations and training programmes for managers of social service organisations.

- ❖ provides support and tools to the employers regarding labour law and employers' duties and responsibilities,
- ❖ promotes actions of employers and their organisations to public authorities.

2. OBJECTIVES AND METHODOLOGY OF THE SURVEY

2.1 OBJECTIVES OF THE PROJECT

Among other things, the project set two sub-objectives:

- ❖ comprehensive coverage of the issue of employment of foreigners in the social services sector, including identification of significant barriers that have a negative impact on the employment of foreign workers;
- ❖ drafting recommendations, based on a review of the results achieved, taking into account good practice from individual countries.

2.2 SURVEY METHODOLOGY

In order to meet the above-mentioned sub-objectives, the legislative basis for the employment of foreign workers was firstly elaborated in each partner country and then two online questionnaire surveys were conducted on the issue, both among social service providers and among foreign employees working in social services. The results obtained were subsequently refined and complemented by the conclusions from in-depth interviews with both groups. The findings were then discussed in a focus group to which the employer respondents were invited.

Subsequently, each project partner, i.e. for each participating country, prepared an analytical study – a country report according to a predetermined outline. The results for each country were presented and discussed at the Transnational project meeting of all participating organizations. This meeting took place on November 22-23, 2022 in Prague in Czech Republic and was attended by all partner organizations.

At the end of the first project activity Analysis in partner countries, two summary reports were prepared - Summary analytical report of the survey and Summary report of the survey. Both documents are available in English. In the national language of a specific country, reports are available on the websites of individual partner organizations and are freely accessible. These summary reports contain country reports on individual countries.

LEGISLATIVE FRAMEWORK FOR THE EMPLOYMENT OF FOREIGN WORKERS

A basic overview of the legislation regulating the employment of foreign nationals in the territory of each participating country and related legislation was carried out from the perspective of whether they are EU, EEA and Swiss citizens or third-country nationals. In particular, attention was paid to the type of residence, visa requirements and work permits.

QUESTIONNAIRE SURVEY

The survey of social service providers was carried out via an online questionnaire (see Annex 1), which was sent to a large number of providers. Among the providers contacted were organisations providing all types of social services (homes for the elderly, residential homes, care services, personal assistance, etc.) and providing both outreach (outpatient) and residential services. The aim of the survey was to obtain responses from at least 50 providers in each participating country.

The survey mapped specific experiences with the employment of foreign workers. For employers who already employ foreign workers, the focus was on the recruitment of foreign workers, the positions they hold, the reasons for employing foreign workers, their evaluation in terms of work performance and activities to help the integration of foreign workers. Employers who do not employ foreign workers were asked about the reasons for not using foreign workers. For both groups of employers, the possibilities of employing foreign workers in the future and the need for training in the employment of foreign workers were then monitored.

The survey among foreign workers was also conducted in the form of an online questionnaire (see Annex 2). In some countries, staff were also given the opportunity to send their answers in writing on pre-prepared questionnaires to the relevant partner organisation involved in the project. The contacting of foreign workers was done through the participating employers. They were asked by the partner organisation to provide their expatriate workers with a link to the online questionnaire or to provide them with the questionnaire in written form. The questionnaire was completely anonymous, only at the end the employees could provide a contact email or phone number in case they were interested in participating in the in-depth interviews. The aim of the survey was to obtain responses from at least 50 people in each participating country. For expatriate workers, the survey looked in particular at:

- ❖ the reasons that led to your decision to work abroad
- ❖ specific experience of getting a job as such (obtaining a work permit, demonstrating competence, etc.),
- ❖ experience of working in social services,
- ❖ language skills and courses,
- ❖ integration into society, the attitude of the neighborhood, etc.

IN-DEPTH INTERVIEWS

In-depth interviews with social service providers (at least 10 structured interviews in each participating country) were conducted with selected representatives from among the respondents to the above questionnaire survey. Employers who were interested in participating in the in-depth interviews could contact the relevant partner organisation themselves or were approached and asked to participate. The in-depth interviews were held in person, by videoconference or by telephone and complemented or extended the results obtained by the questionnaire survey.

Also, in the case of interviews with foreign workers, the aim was to obtain a minimum of 10 guided interviews in each participating country. As the staff questionnaires were completely anonymous, only those who expressed an interest in being interviewed participated in the in-depth interviews. In the event of insufficient number of interviews, each partner organisation invited the employers to ask their foreign staff members to be interviewed. In-depth interviews were conducted in person, by videoconference or by telephone without the presence of the employer, and only the foreign worker and the employee of the partner organisation conducting the interview were present at any time to avoid any influence from the employer. Here again, the interviews complemented and extended the area covered by the survey.

FOCUS GROUPS

Discussion of the results obtained from the surveys was conducted in a focus group in each country with at least 10 employers who participated in the survey. Participation was also open to foreign employees if they were interested. During the meeting, the results of the questionnaire survey and in-depth interviews between employers and employees and the key findings from the overall survey were presented to the focus group participants. A discussion among all participants followed and at the end the most important findings and facts were summarised and recommendations were proposed.

COUNTRY REPORT

At the end of the survey, each partner country prepared an analytical study according to a predetermined outline, including:

- ✦ analysis of the legislative environment for the employment of foreign workers in the country,
- ✦ the results of both questionnaire surveys,
- ✦ results of in-depth interviews with employers and expatriate employees,
- ✦ conclusions from the focus group,
- ✦ suggestions and recommendations for the country.

SUMMARY SURVEY REPORT

The last part of the analysis in the partner countries is the creation of a summary survey report, i.e. a summary international report, containing results and conclusions from all country survey reports.

3. LEGISLATIVE FRAMEWORK FOR THE EMPLOYMENT OF FOREIGN WORKERS

3.1 EU/EEA AND SWISS NATIONALS

Very simply, if an EU/EEA and Swiss citizen or his/her family member wants to work in the countries under review, he/she can work without a work permit, just like a national - he/she has free access to the labour market.

OBLIGATIONS OF THE EMPLOYER

The employer is obliged to inform the relevant institution about the employment of a foreigner (EU/EEA or Swiss citizen) no later than on the day of commencement of work - information obligation.

In addition to the information obligation, the employer or the legal or natural person to whom the EU citizen or his/her family member is posted has a registration obligation. In practice, this is an obligation to record certain personal data about the employed or posted EU citizen or his/her family member. The scope is almost identical to the data that an employer or a legal or natural person is obliged to notify to the designated authority as part of their information obligation.

3.2 NON-EU/EEA AND SWISS NATIONALS

On the other hand, a non-EU/EEA or non-Swiss citizen (a third-country national) in the countries surveyed do not have free access to the labour market, with a few exceptions. He/she can only work provided that he/she has obtained a work permit together with a valid residence permit or a relevant (employment) card.

EMPLOYEE CARDS

The issuance of cards is applied to facilitate access for selected groups of foreign nationals. There are several types of cards (blue, green, red-white-red, etc.) and they are mostly intended for skilled persons in professions for which there is not enough suitable labour on the local labour market. The card most often entitles the foreigner to work for the employer in the job and place of work for which the card was issued.

This simplified approach is often applied to citizens of former colonial states.

RESIDENCE PERMIT

On the basis of Regulation (EC) No 810/2009 of the European Parliament and of the Council (Visa Code), short-stay visas are granted for stays of up to 90 days in the Schengen area. In addition to other cases, short-term visas are granted, for example, for employment or seasonal employment, where a third-country national is issued with an employment permit entitling him/her to work for an employer listed in the permit.

Foreigners who want to stay for more than 3 months for employment purposes must apply for a long-term residence permit. It should be added that a foreigner from a third country may, as a rule, apply for permanent residence after 5 years of continuous temporary residence in the territory of the State. Holders of this permit then have free access to the labour market. Persons who have been granted asylum or subsidiary protection may also be included in the same group.

PERMISSION TO WORK

In principle, it is only possible to obtain a work permit together with a valid residence permit or relevant (employment) card for a specific job with a specific employer. In most cases, this must be a job for which there is no suitable "home-grown" candidate available in the long term. The employment permit is usually issued for a limited period (max. 2 years). It can be extended, even repeatedly, on application.

OBLIGATIONS OF THE EMPLOYER

The employer is obliged to inform the relevant institution in writing (via a standardised form on entry into employment) of the foreigner's entry into employment no later than on the day of entry into employment (the so-called information obligation). At the same time, the employer is obliged to inform the institution in writing (using a standardised form) that the foreigner who has been issued with a work permit or relevant card:

1. hasn't started work,
2. has left employment before the expiry of the period for which the permit was issued,
or
3. employment has been terminated by notice or agreement, or
4. employment was terminated by immediate dismissal.

When employment is terminated by notice, agreement or immediate termination, the employer must also state the reason for the termination.

The employer is obliged to keep a register of the foreigners it employs. At the same time, it is obliged to keep copies of the documents proving the foreigners' lawful residence for the duration of the employment and for 3 years from the end of the employment of the foreigner.

In the case of employment of a foreigner, the employer is obliged to offer the foreigner the working and wage conditions customary for a citizen of the country in the same job classification according to the applicable legislation or in accordance with collective agreements or employment contracts.

4. EMPLOYERS' ATTITUDES TOWARDS EMPLOYING FOREIGN WORKERS

The employment of foreign social workers in the EU countries surveyed reflects the existing situation in each country. Their presence in social services is more frequent in countries where:

- ✦ clients of social services are people with an immigration background, especially in cases where they have not fully acquired the language of the country where the service is provided;
- ✦ a language that is known as a world language, i.e. spoken in more than one country and often taught in schools (English, French, German);
- ✦ multiple languages are spoken.

This is because direct care workers communicating with social service clients must have a good command of the language of the clients. When dealing with clients, it is not possible to allow misunderstanding of the information being communicated due to poor language skills. The situation is made more difficult by the fact that social services clients are mainly elderly and disabled people.

The number of foreign workers is also strongly influenced by the fact that positions where a lower level of language proficiency would not be such problem are not attractive to many foreign workers - these are lower paid positions.

4.1 RECRUITMENT OF FOREIGN STAFF

It can be concluded that targeted recruitment of foreign employees has not been carried out in social services, and if it has, it is mainly in cases where there is a shortage of suitable labour available on the regional (local) labour market. However, it should be added that the interviews clearly showed that the management of organisations operating in social services are not well aware of the possible sources of targeted outreach to the group of potential employees - foreigners in social services.

However, organization do not oppose the employment of foreigners in general. In the recruitment process, the ability of the individual to perform the position is always assessed, including the degree of language proficiency required, i.e. in relation to the clientele of the establishment requesting the position. Thus, it may be that the vacancy requires a language other than that commonly spoken in the country. It even seems that this language requirement pattern will increase in the future. The reason for this is the ever-increasing number of social service clients with a migration background, where knowledge of their native language or culture is often a considerable advantage.

Foreign employees are therefore only recruited for positions for which they have sufficient competences, including language skills.

In recruitment, as elsewhere, the main use is made of references, recommendations for specific people from current or former employees, colleagues from the social or health sector. Social service providers only use the services of (foreign) recruitment agencies in the most urgent cases, and are certainly not favouring them.

In spite of the above, it must be admitted that the willingness to employ foreigners depends to some extent not only on the situation on the labour market, but also on the attitude of the management of the organisation, which may be influenced/encumbered by existing prejudices. If the management believes that employing foreigners is associated with (dangerous) threats, whether due to the necessary administrative tasks (obtaining a work permit and its extension, nostrification diploma, registration) or cultural and social aspects, then in most cases foreign workers are considered as an unnecessary "burden", an unwanted risk. The perception is different if the foreigner has already been granted permanent residence or even accreditation of his/her education. Coming from the same cultural background is also an advantage.

4.2 POSITIONS HELD BY FOREIGN WORKERS

Foreign workers in social services work mainly in support positions, where it is often not necessary to have a good knowledge of the language and to have the appropriate educational qualifications. This fact is to some extent also related to the recognition of education in the country of origin, especially in the case of citizens from so-called third countries - see below. This hypothesis is consistent with the link established between the length of stay in the 'host' country and the position held, where it can be seen that as the length of stay in the 'host' country increases, so does the number of people doing professional work.

4.3 REASONS FOR EMPLOYING FOREIGN WORKERS

As already mentioned, for most organisations the most important reason for employing foreign workers is the lack of adequate labour in the regional labour market.

Time flexibility and specific skills proved to be important reasons. It should be added, however, that time flexibility is not insignificantly influenced by whether or not the foreign worker has a family or children in the country of employment. If so, this group is no different from 'home' workers in terms of flexibility.

Lower wages as a reason for employing foreign workers has not been confirmed. Most social services organisations have uniform salary tables, with wage regulations applicable to all employees, regardless of whether they are foreigners or not. In addition, the same remuneration is required by the law.

4.4 EVALUATION OF FOREIGN EMPLOYEES

According to the representatives of social service providers, foreign workers working in social services do not behave differently from domestic workers - some are better, some are worse. The length of time required for their full incorporation into the work process corresponds to this. This can be influenced to some extent not only by the level of qualification and education already achieved, but also by the level of language proficiency.

Representatives of social service organizations across countries agree that foreign workers in the majority:

- ✦ are interested in integrating into society;
- ✦ are accepted by colleagues and clients without any major problems;
- ✦ are interested in learning the language of the country where they work;
- ✦ have a small absence rate;
- ✦ have a low fluctuation rate;
- ✦ they appreciate their work more;
- ✦ are more reliable workers;
- ✦ are willing to do work that "domestic workers" are not interested in;
- ✦ are generally limited by their level of language proficiency.

In addition to this, they also believe that the culture or religion of the foreigners they employ does not have a significant impact on their work performance, although, particularly in countries with employees from North Africa and Asia, individual cases of negative impact have been reported.

4.5 ACTIVITIES FACILITATING THE INTEGRATION OF FOREIGN EMPLOYEES

If an organisation employs a foreign worker, it is in the organisation's best interest to ensure that the worker is as well prepared as possible to perform the job. Employers therefore set up various integration activities to help manage the performance resulting from the position for which the foreigner has been hired. As it turns out, these are usually not using the existing system in the country for this purpose, but activities set up based on the sensitivity of the managers in the organisation.

In practice, the organisation first tries to integrate the foreign employee with a view to "safe" work performance, and then provides various courses to help improve his/her skills. In most cases, as in the case of a home worker, a mentoring method is used.

As long as the language is not mastered to the necessary extent, they try to choose such logistics of work that the client is not endangered or the quality of the service provided is not reduced. The organisations therefore also set up various measures to help the client acquire the language more quickly. Among the measures applied in practice, approaches that were noted by the management of the organisations in the course of the surveys carried out, for example:

- ❖ the inclusion of foreigners in individual work teams is "rationed" - e.g. only one foreign worker is present in a group at one time,
- ❖ communication between workers in their native language is prohibited in the workplace.

Current staff who have at least some knowledge of the language of the incoming employee are also used for integration. For example, the involvement of a "liaison", i.e. a person from outside the organisation who assisted with the translation of necessary instructions/documents related to the performance of the work into a language understandable to the incoming employee, was also mentioned.

Support for self-study by an existing 'home' employee of the organisation was also noted. The employer has enabled this person to re-acquire the foreign language skills of newly arrived foreigners, which can facilitate the entry of foreigners into the organisation.

In addition to the above, some organisations also help foreign employees to secure housing, to help them place their children in school, to communicate with the authorities, etc. It should be noted, however, that the extent of the support provided depends on the "set-up" of the organisation's management.

4.6 REASONS FOR NOT USING FOREIGN WORKERS

In the case of non-employment of foreign workers in the organisation of social service providers, the main reason is that persons of other nationalities simply did not apply for the job. It is therefore not a classic barrier to employment. Similarly, this is the case when there is sufficient available labour on the local labour market. This fact does not allow, with a few legal exceptions, the admission of third-country nationals.

The real barriers to employing foreign workers from the perspective of social service providers are the reasons listed below (the order of the barriers listed below is according to their importance as monitored by the research):

- ❖ the organisation has no experience of employing foreign workers;
- ❖ the organisation does not have an entity to help make all the related arrangements;
- ❖ the organisation is concerned about problems arising from a lack of language proficiency;
- ❖ the organization is concerned about the non-acceptance of foreign staff by the facility's clients;
- ❖ the organisation is concerned about the administration involved in employment;
- ❖ the organisation is concerned about problems related to the different culture or religion of foreign workers.

In the interviews, two key themes were highlighted by the organisations, namely the recognition of qualifications/training and the extension of work permits.

RECOGNITION OF QUALIFICATIONS/TRAINING

Difficulties with the recognition of qualifications are particularly experienced by those organisations that employ foreigners in positions where professional qualifications must be documented. This is particularly the case for non-EU, EEA and Swiss nationals. Organisations believe that it is an unnecessarily time-consuming, highly rigid process with significant financial costs for employees. In addition, additional examinations and internships are often required.

EXTENSION OF WORK PERMITS

Often, foreign workers first work for organisations with a short-term residence permit, which entitles them to work for up to 3 months. If the work exceeds 3 months, then a long-term residence permit must be obtained. The process of obtaining a long-term residence permit is lengthy and the organisation is exposed to a high risk that, after having adequately integrated the foreign worker into its structures and prepared him/her for (safe) work performance, the foreigner will have to stop working for the organisation because his/her residence permit will not be processed in time.

4.7 POSSIBILITY OF EMPLOYING FOREIGN WORKERS IN THE FUTURE

In the future, as the demand for social services grows, organisations operating in the social services sector are aware of the need to engage a larger number of staff, which can be covered from among citizens of other countries. Thus, they consider the employment of foreign workers as a possible solution to the expected (and nowadays even in some regions long-standing) shortage of workers in the sector.

In this context, however, it is required:

- ✦ simplifying the existing administrative process involved in employing foreign workers,
- ✦ then setting up functional support for organisations
- ✦ and, last but not least, support for language courses at the workplace.

The above is also reflected in the fact that although most employers have no preferences regarding the origin of foreign employees, thanks to the significantly easier access to the labour market for EU, EEA and Swiss citizens, these are preferred by a significant number of employers. Provided, of course, that the required qualifications are met.

Similarly, most organisations do not have a set preference in terms of a type of employment relationship. However, if they do, it is mainly a preference for the employee to enter into an employment relationship directly with their organisation.

4.8 EDUCATION ON THE EMPLOYMENT OF FOREIGN WORKERS

A peculiarity is that most representatives of the surveyed organisations did not show any interest in obtaining training on the issue of employing foreign workers. However, in the subsequent interviews and focus groups, interest was already registered, even among representatives of those organisations that did not declare interest in the questionnaire survey. It can even be argued that most of the representatives interviewed would welcome training.

Interest in the following topics was monitored:

- ❖ the legal framework related to the employment of foreign workers;
- ❖ possible ways of recruiting potential employees in the country of origin;
- ❖ a detailed presentation of the employer's administrative procedure for employing foreign workers, including an overview of important actors who can be contacted with specific questions or problems;
- ❖ presentation of examples of good practice in employing foreign employees, including their recruitment, integration into the team, mentoring, etc.
- ❖ cultural, social, religious and other differences of foreign workers.

5. ATTITUDES OF FOREIGN WORKERS TOWARDS WORKING IN SOCIAL SERVICES

The social services sector, especially in larger cities, is not sufficiently saturated with domestic labour, which gives room for the employment of foreign workers. However, the number of foreigners actually employed is in line with the requirement of these jobs for a high level of language proficiency, especially in the spoken word. The local dialect is a particular problem.

5.1 REASONS FOR WORKING ABROAD

If we take into account the consequences of the invasion of Ukraine by Russia and the influx of refugees into the Czech Republic and Austria in particular, then it can be concluded that the interest in working in another country on the part of foreign workers in social services is driven mainly by economic motives. These are then reinforced by family or friendship motives, when the first arrivals are followed by their family members and friends.

Knowledge and affinity of the native language and the language of the "host" country, as well as similarity of culture, play an important role in the decision-making process.

5.2 WORK PERMITS, DIPLOMA NOSTRIFICATION

WORK PERMIT

Who needs/does not need a work permit is determined by national legislation in each country. However, as the survey showed, the procedure for obtaining a permit in all partner countries is unnecessarily lengthy, administratively demanding and limiting for potential employees in getting a job. It was also noted that the process often has an uncertain outcome, which negatively affects both potential employees and employers.

NOSTRIFICATION¹

Although foreign workers (those who need nostrification) do not consider the process of education nostrification to be complicated, they admit that they would hardly be able to manage the process on their own at the time of their arrival in the host country without the help of their environment, employer, intermediary agency or other (non-profit) organization. This is especially the case if the potential employees have a language barrier or if they come from a different socio-cultural background.

Interestingly, respondents said that many official forms cannot be understood even after several years in the host country.

In general, the process of nostrification seems unnecessarily long and costly for newcomers (verification of the diploma and its official translation).

5.3 WORK IN SOCIAL SERVICES

Foreign employees are interested in working in social services, despite the fact that they have no experience in this field. As the results of the survey showed, about half of the employees had no experience in this work before their employment. These were mainly people performing support activities. It should be added that the results for individual countries varied, e.g. only 30% of respondents in the Czech Republic had experience of working in social services before starting their (current) job, BUT almost half of the respondents had already used their qualifications in social services.

Most respondents learn about the possibility of employment in social services from their friends or acquaintances. In the case of people who have been employed in the host country for a longer period of time, the source of information is usually an advertisement, or the respondent simply looks up the facility and goes to ask about employment in person or sends a written inquiry. The services of an employment agency are rarely used.

Employees' entry into their jobs is supported by the employer both by assigning a mentor - an experienced employee - and by providing training for the job. In most cases, however, this is a "normal" onboarding that is given as needed to each new employee.

A positive finding is the interest of foreign employees in improving their qualifications for work in social services, not only informally through various courses, but also formally, when the level of education is increased.

Foreign workers generally praise the work in social services. They highly rate the quality of the working environment as well as the quality of relations with their superiors and colleagues. However, they are less satisfied with their financial remuneration, which most would welcome to be higher (a general problem throughout the sector).

5.4 LANGUAGE COURSES

Foreign employees, quite logically, if they have little or no knowledge of the language of the host country, seek out language courses that can help them improve their language skills. In particular, free language courses available on the market are used. However, most of them focus only on the basics of the language. Many therefore rely more on self-study (reading, listening to TV, radio), practical life at work and, if necessary, especially in connection with the granting of permanent residence, then use the services of private (paid) language agencies, teachers.

A separate chapter is the ability to understand the regional dialect, which clients often speak and which foreign workers are unable to understand without a longer stay in the host country.

5.5 INTEGRATION INTO SOCIETY

In the context of the integration process, foreign workers are appreciated for their approach not only by employers, but also by organisations that assist foreigners with integration. Assistance is provided with housing, with kindergarten/school for children, with the authorities, etc. Considering the small scale of services provided, which is conditioned by limited financial possibilities, foreign employees themselves are often interested in helping their newly arrived compatriots and are involved in setting up/providing integration activities. It should be added, however, that the arrival of most foreigners tends to be applied in a snowball method, whereby expatriates help each other and therefore do not use of integration activities much (which is to some extent also a consequence of the limited availability of services).

The vast majority of foreign workers working in social services were not discriminated in their workplace on the basis of nationality, ethnic origin, culture, religion, skin colour, etc.

6. RECOMMENDATIONS

6.1 RECOMMENDATIONS FROM REPRESENTATIVES OF SOCIAL SERVICES PROVIDERS

- ❖ on the part of the state, or agencies or employment offices, to create a comprehensive document that clearly and concisely describes the employer's procedure set by national legislation in the case of recruitment of persons from abroad;
- ❖ on the part of the state to simplify the administrative procedures for employing foreign workers, especially low-skilled workers;
- ❖ on the part of the state, agencies or employment offices to set up a free advisory service for employers who are interested in employing foreign workers or already employ them;
- ❖ on the part of the state, with regard to the shortage of health care workers on the labour market, to set up new functional tools and measures to help attract relevant foreign workers to the structures of social services; with regard to ensuring safe work in human care, to set up conditions for the (central) creation of basic procedural materials and rules for the social services sector in the worker's native language;
- ❖ on the part of the state to support (financially) the implementation of language courses for foreign workers, which are supplemented by specific vocabulary used in certain professions;
- ❖ on the part of the state to support the creation of a lexicon containing terms regularly used in particular sectors and fields;
- ❖ on the part of the state to support (free) educational activities for employers that address the issue of workplace relations where a foreign employee is present (differences in culture, customs, perceptions ...);
- ❖ in view of the increasing shortage of relevant staff, consider setting conditions enabling providers to achieve a deeper knowledge of the employment of foreigners, in particular through the transfer of examples of good practice between individual organisations operating in social services. In particular, attention should be focused on:
 - ❖ possibilities and functional ways of reaching potential employees in the country of origin,
 - ❖ the application of the statutory process for the employment of foreign workers in social services,
 - ❖ effective ways of integrating foreign employees into the organisation's structures,
 - ❖ Effective ways of coping with the language barrier,
 - ❖ knowledge of regional actors helping with integration,
 - ❖ describing cultural differences and bridging them in practice.

6.2 RECOMMENDATIONS FROM FOREIGN WORKERS

- ❖ on the part of the state to speed up the process of recognition of education and provide support during the procedure;
- ❖ on the part of the state to provide assistance/support in dealing with official documents related to more than just residence and work permits;
- ❖ setting up a central information point (i.e. an easily accessible website) for all foreign applicants, with all relevant employment-related information;
- ❖ Ensuring that there are enough free and effectively set up language courses that really 'move participants forward' in their language learning;
- ❖ on the part of the state to support the production of a clear brochure in various languages that covers important topics in a nutshell, the knowledge of which will contribute significantly to the integration of the individual into society:
 - ❖ the rights and obligations of workers in your country;
 - ❖ issues related to housing (e.g. that the deposit is not paid in cash, that it is necessary to check the land registry, whether the landlord is really the owner ...)
 - ❖ education-related issues (supply of formal and non-formal education, funding ...);
 - ❖ social insurance (sickness insurance, pension insurance ...)
 - ❖ health services
 - ❖ family policy, etc.
